Data

- This month's map visualizes data from the Center for Neighborhood Technology's (CNT) Housing and Transportation \(H&T\) Affordability Index.
- We mapped transportation burden and annual vehicle miles traveled for the moderate income regional household in the Southeast. Mapping was done at both the census tract and county level.
- CNT's transportation model accounts for transit costs in 3 ways: auto use, auto ownership, and public transit use.

Transportation burden

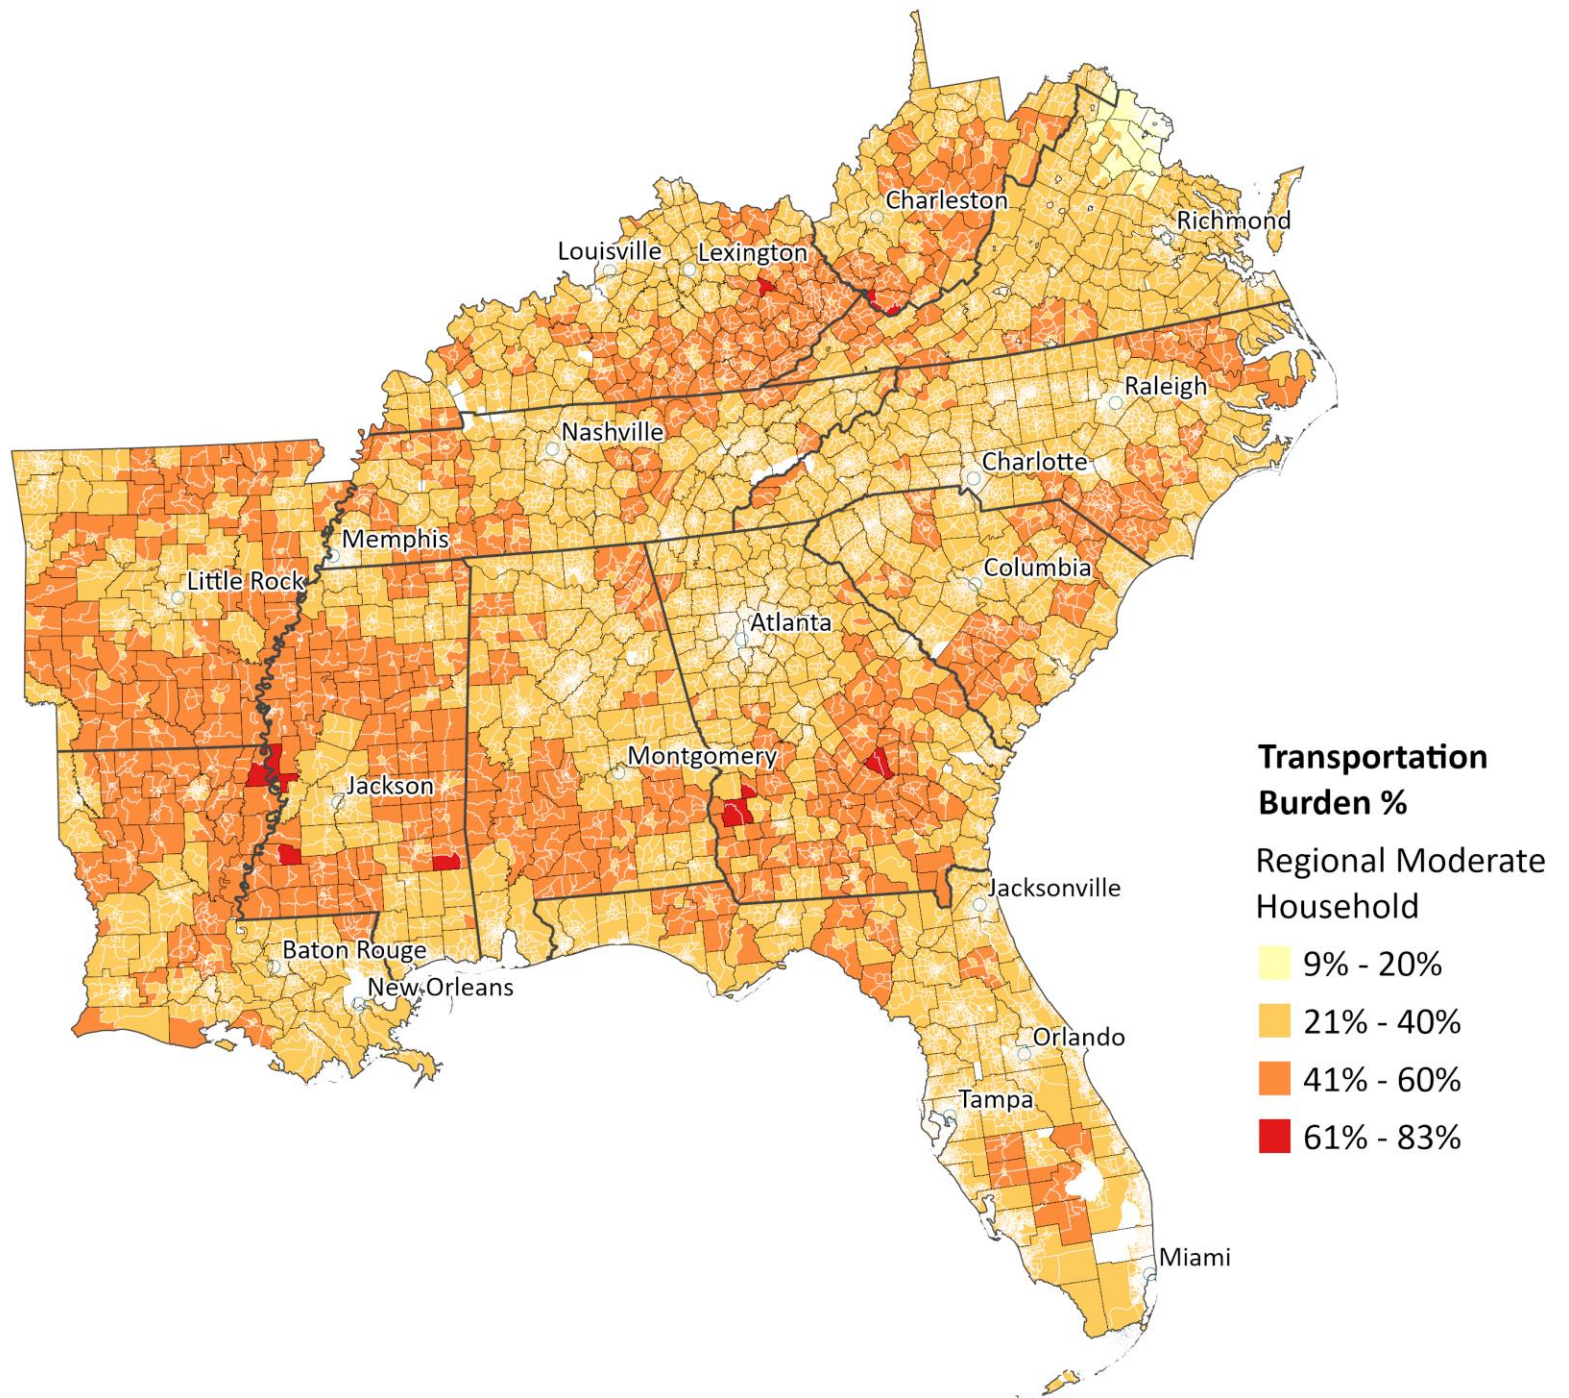

- Households who spend 15% or more of their annual income on transportation are considered to be transportation burdened.
- For housing and transportation to be considered affordable in the U.S., households should not spend more than 30% of income on housing, and no more than 15% of their income on transportation.

Discussion

Discussion

Discussion

- Travel burdens are concentrated in rural geographies, amplifying disparities for marginalized communities.
- The most transportation efficient locations are situated in urban areas and small towns.

Discussion

Relative to urban contexts rural communities have:

- Less connected pedestrian, biking, and transit infrastructure.
- Longer distances between destinations.
- Higher car dependency, higher transportation costs, and higher poverty rates.

The background of the slide features a low-angle shot of a tall, lattice-structured power line tower against a clear blue sky. To the right, the branches of trees with bright yellow autumn leaves are visible. A semi-transparent white horizontal band runs across the middle of the image, serving as a backdrop for the title.
